

Reflections on the conduct of Boston Federalism, on receiving the late news.

The frequent displays of federal arrogance and inferiority, on the arrival of news from Europe, on the exchange of British, have become so familiar, that they begin to lose all their effect. The discreditable relations quickly become subjects of ridicule, and their aims are perceived the fully of truth to their ridiculous nature. We cannot approve the circulation of news on the immediate arrival of a vessel more aptly, than in opening a bag of down feathers in a gale of wind. It flies in every direction, and every one catches some part of the fragments. Some individuals are more loaded than others; but each federalist carries strong marks that he has been in the focus of the distribution. They run from street to street, scattering the gossamer notes in various circles, till at length every man we see, exhibits some tokens of the intercourse he has had with these political feathers.

While however we are diverted with the ridiculous conduct of these persons, we cannot but pity the ignorance to conspicuous in their exultations. The triumph over Bonaparte as related on Tuesday last, was more excessive than we have hitherto observed. It was represented as a total defeat—that the conscripts refused fighting—that the allies were within sixty miles of Paris—that "DOWN WITH THE TYRANT," was the universal cry—in short, that peace would be restored to Europe, diffused by the victories obtained over France, and under the auspices of the restoration of the Bourbon dynasty. That England had, under the diplomacy of Castlereagh, become the grand umpire in the great question of commerce, on the final ratification of the negotiation. Upon the least reflection, every man of common sense must know, that the total overthrow of Bonaparte would eventually terminate in that control over the American commerce, as to give Britain a pre-eminence over us in all our commercial intercourse with the Allied Powers. For if Britain is already thus powerful in the settlement of commercial preliminaries between the allied nations, how great must be her ascendancy, after the restoration of the old French monarchy? The federal powers will consider themselves under obligation to England for the overthrow of Bonaparte, and as a return for their assistance by subsidies, they will be disposed to become as liberal to them by exclusive commercial benefits on a final treaty—Besides, the finances of Britain being no longer called on for similar sacrifices, they will be more able to concentrate their energies for the purpose of enforcing the privileges of their commerce, even in case the Allies might be delinquent. For the American merchants, who have so frequently experienced the impositions of Britain on their trade, and in whose Admiralty Courts such a large amount of property has been condemned by Judge Scott, to exult at the complete vanquishment of Bonaparte, is an instance of ignorance unparalleled in commercial history, and no other place than the Boston exchange could produce a similar instance.

The absurd stories of the conscripts refusing to fight the invaders of France, are also among the numerous follies contained in the late reports. To suppose that the veterans of France should become cowards on their own soil, is too ridiculous to be believed. The brave troops of France, the legions of honor, the invincible body of YEUNANRY who now cultivate the farms which formerly belonged to the crown, nobility, church, &c. to surrender them to a lawless banditti of Cockicks!—to submit to the degradation of such a horde of rascals!—to bow their necks to the yoke of northern tyrants!—to become the vassals of such infuriated lordlings!—to be called on to retrace the gold and silver altars, and Virgin Maies—the sanctified vessels of the churches—to exchange their own mansions for the gloomy cloisters of monks and friars—rather than submit to this, the "young men and maidens," would rise en masse and exterminate the invading enemy.

Although the report on the late news, is not verified by any newspapers, yet such was the frenzy of federalists, that all the above visionary stories were propagated with avidity. That the "street around Paris" were run down, and became the harriers to the city—"down with the tyrant"—was the universal outcry, and yet Bonaparte was free from personal danger, amidst the general denunciation! If a large majority of the citizens desired the downfall of Bonaparte, what prevented the catastrophe?—If the conscripts became his enemies, what hindered them from overthrowing him? But while this popular delirium prevailed in France, the minister of Bonaparte was held in the highest estimation even by the British minister. Is it probable, that Castlereagh would pay that high respect to the minister of a tyrant, whom all the people were crying out to pull down? It is recommended to the federalists, to become more cautious and circumspect during the paroxysms of their exultations—for men of reflection are only smiling at them during their gambols; knowing, that after cooling down a little, and sleeping over their news, the vapors of their brains will evaporate.

MELROSVILLE, (G) March 2.—Gen. Floyd reached this place, in good health, on Sunday last. The payment of the troops commenced to-day. Our town is crowded with the brave fellows. We have nothing important from Fort Hull. We presume that no offensive operations will be commenced, until the arrival of the North Carolina militia.

FROM THE ENQUIRER.

NEW SONG.

Americans, waken! your vigil unfold,
The times are perilous when traitors are bold;
O think what a treasure on liberty's shore
Lies the attempt to subject us once more!

The choice of British seduction we dread
Far more than Bellina's unmerciful lead—
But fury of havoc makes families weep,
The Briton's rank spell drags the million to sleep.

What dust can be thrown in the eyes of the fold
More hard to expel than the dust of her gold—
When the patriot lead of the neckless pure,
Is cut for the pain that accompanies cure!

A rancour and wretched activity feeds,
The nation's summing conspirator's deeds—
Who drills the wild virago—brides Algerine—kuns—
Embroidered to strike at our glorious nurse!

See the land of fix'd habits, guide women by night,
To baffle Decatur, exhibit blue light—
As if the blue laws urged a traitor for gain
To comfort the hostile and rivet their chain!

Mark the mind—'tis betray'd when the actions expand—
Mark speeches exulting the foe of the land—
Who drills the wild virago—brides Algerine—kuns—
For charming our brothers and seeping our sons!

Americans awaken! your valor unfold,
The times are perilous when traitors are bold;
O think what a treasure on liberty's shore
Lies the attempt to subject us once more!

To the Honourable the Senate and House of Representatives, in General Court assembled,

MUNDY SHEW,
THE Boston Manufacturing Company, that they are the Proprietors of the Mill site and Mill privileges, situate in Newton and Waltham, formerly belonging to John Boies; that the said mill privileges have been kept open at the proper lea-sons, has now become a nuisance to the public, as from the said information, it appears that no fish have many years passed the said dam, through the said fish way, although it has been sufficient for them to pass freely, and your Petitioners believe, that the fish which used formerly to pass up Charles River, beyond the said dam, have for many years ceased to ascend higher than the said dam, and fish river, next below that of your Petitioners.—Wherefore your petitioners pray that they may have leave to shut said fish way and to continue the same shut for the future.
PATRICK T. JACKSON,
Agent for said Company.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Italian Paste Blacking.

THE Subscriber has lately procured the art of making the ITALIAN PASTE BLACK-ING, and has found by making an experiment, that it is far superior in quality, to any ever made or imported into this country. For a long time it has been the study of many, to invent some kind of Blacking, that would not be injurious to the leather, and at the same time prevent so much labour in blackening the boots—This Blacking will remedy both evils, for there is nothing in this Blacking that is injurious to the leather, but softens and preserves it, and is used with one third part of the labour of any other—This Blacking is put up into pint and half pint tin canisters, with directions for using it. Prepared by the subscriber only, and sold wholesale and retail by him.

N. B.—Those who want to buy good and cheap
Blacking, will do well to call and see for themselves, and if the above Blacking does not answer the recommendations as above, the purchaser may have the liberty to return it and receive his money back again.
All orders strictly attended to. Fight cents for all empty canisters returned.
